Marilyn Hacker

"about the intimate and sometimes painful ties between mothers and daughters and lovers, the more relaxed and nurturing ties of friendship, and the invigorating act of claiming ties with women from the past. . . . a sort of handbook for survival. . . . intimate and intellectual at the same time."

Kathleen Aguero The Women's Review of Books

"No one sings quite like this. A capella, she's a whole choir. Elegant and versatile in the strictest forms, she is inventive and exuberant in content. . . . colloquial, lyrical, uncouth, old-fashioned and fun. (How many books of poems are fun?)"

Carol Muske The New York Times Book Review

THE HANG-GLIDER'S DAUGHTER traces the development of an unabashedly lesbian feminist poet. This selection from two of her books and the presentation of new, uncollected poems reveals the poet's consistent grappling with life's deepest concerns. Her dazzling displays of 'formal' verse, mellowed to a warm assured artistry, unravel our most intimate passions. A tribute to a major poet.

Marilyn Hacker, born in 1942, lives in New York and Paris. Her books include: Going Back to the River, Love, Death and the Changing of the Seasons, Assumptions, Taking Notice, Separations, and Presentation Piece. She is the editor of The Kenyon Review.
